Gene Dominique is a Bay Area photographer who has been a member of Berkeley Fine Art Photographers since the group's inception in 2010. While Gene earned his Bachelor of Arts degree in photojournalism, he considers himself a generalist whose photographic work tends to be project-based.

Gene's current work includes a series of landscapes and seascapes from Martha's Vineyard, Massachusetts as well as a series documenting recently discovered pre-world war II cameras owned by a local collector. When asked about the source of his inspiration, Gene noted, "One recurring source of inspiration is my insomnia. Many nights I have had a hard time sleeping because my mind races with photographic ideas; I've come to know this as a source of creativity so I keep a bedside notebook and write and draw ideas that come to me in the middle of the night. In the light of day I try to create what I've imagined in the dark."

Gene's work has been exhibited in a variety of brick-and-mortar galleries and virtual destinations.

Gene Dominique is a Bay Area photographer and digital artist.

Gene's right-brain art is project-based rather being anchored in a single photographic genre. Gene recently completed a series called Small Things, a meditation on mundane objects and artifacts of our daily lives that go unnoticed for the beauty they hold.

Gene's other recent projects include a study of landscapes and seascapes and his hot new series called Playing With Fire.

His left-brain accomplishments include a BA in Photojournalism from San Jose State University, a JD from UC Hastings College of the Law and a busy legal career.
