This project reflects a new direction for me. Still life has not been my focus. However the preservation of life (the flowers) in ice in order to capture their essence in an atypical representation appealed to me. This is an extension of my street photography, which I shoot to capture the most fleeting of moments- the way they would appear in my memory. The use of distortion, vagueness, dream-like images, or motion is very important to me to convey the elusiveness of the small moments that make up the bulk of everyday life. The dichotomy of a still frame that holds dreams or wonder is the essence of photographic imagery, to me.

I am an occupational therapist by training, a mother to two elementary children, and a photographer forever searching to make concrete the images I see and feel.
